

VU Research Portal

Buzzing across boundaries

Bahlmann, M.D.

2011

document version

Publisher's PDF, also known as Version of record

Link to publication in VU Research Portal

citation for published version (APA)

Bahlmann, M. D. (2011). Buzzing across boundaries: An inquiry into the Amsterdam IT and new media-cluster from a knowledge-based perspective. [PhD-Thesis - Research and graduation internal, Vrije Universiteit Amsterdam]. VU University Amsterdam.

General rights

Copyright and moral rights for the publications made accessible in the public portal are retained by the authors and/or other copyright owners and it is a condition of accessing publications that users recognise and abide by the legal requirements associated with these rights.

- Users may download and print one copy of any publication from the public portal for the purpose of private study or research.
- You may not further distribute the material or use it for any profit-making activity or commercial gain
- You may freely distribute the URL identifying the publication in the public portal ?

Take down policy

If you believe that this document breaches copyright please contact us providing details, and we will remove access to the work immediately and investigate your claim.

E-mail address:

vuresearchportal.ub@vu.nl

"A desk is a dangerous place to oversee the world"

John le Carré

Ackn.

Acknowledgements

To be frank, writing the acknowledgement section of this dissertation, in which you so kindly take an interest I assume, feels somewhat discomfoting. All the sudden, it overwhelmingly occurs to me that my research project, which allowed me to explore myself as well as the domain of science for just over four years, has come to an end. Apart from this manuscript, a package of mixed though valuable experiences and emotions remains.

This brings to mind an anecdote I would like to share with you before starting with the actual process of acknowledgement. At the very beginning of my PhD-research, back in June 2006, I was fortunate to co-organize and attend a PhD summer course at the VU University, Amsterdam, which was attended by an international gathering of PhD-candidates. Tom Elfring, one of my promoters, in his capacity of chairman presided over the plenary opening session by providing us an energetic speech in which he partly reflected on his own experiences as a PhD-student. Although I must shamefully admit to my incapacity for remembering all the undoubtedly wise lessons he so generously shared with us that day, one particular message did come across (albeit with some delay). “The completion of a PhD-dissertation”, Tom said, “is a demanding enterprise intellectually, but above all, mentally.” Lacking both experience and judgment, I denounced this remark thinking “sure, whatever.” With the benefit of hindsight, however, I now must confess: a mental challenge it was indeed.

I could not have successfully finished this project, intellectually as well as mentally, without the help and support of many.

Having a background in business administration, I found myself in a position that required me to familiarize myself with scientifically distant domains such as sociology and economic geography. My gratitude goes out to my promoters, prof. dr. Tom Elfring, prof. dr. Peter Groenewegen, and prof. dr. Marleen Huysman, for granting me the occasion to intensively study all scientific domains relevant to this research project while maintaining a sharp focus on its conceptual boundaries and relevancy. Moreover, I would like to thank Tom, Peter, and Marleen for providing me with the opportunity to participate in this research project, for having faith in my academic capabilities, for critically guiding me along the way, and for raising the bar when necessary. I am convinced that your consistent supervision, sharp remarks, and generous advice has increased the quality of my dissertation significantly.

Some say dissertations are there to be written, not to be read. It is therefore that I would especially like to thank the members of my reading committee for allocating their valuable time and energy to reading and valuing this dissertation: prof. dr. Patrick Cohendet (HEC Montréal/ University of Strasbourg), prof. dr. Peter van den Besselaar, prof. dr. Han Gerrits (Vrije Universiteit Amsterdam), prof. dr. Charles Steinfield (Michigan State University).

In addition, I would like to extend my gratitude to my colleagues from the Knowledge, Information, and Networks-research group at the VU University Amsterdam (i.e. Nima, Sarah, Roos, Maura, Julie, Selmar, Jeroen, Alexander, Bart, Feiko, Marlous, Marleen, Quinten, Tibert, Frans, Han, Frank, Leonie, Peter, and Maaïke). From the start of my research I have always felt at ease, experiencing the KIN-group as an inspirational and motivating environment. I realize that I owe this to you guys.

In particular, I would like to thank Alexander Schouten and Bart van den Hooff for constructively commenting my handling of quantitative data, and prof.dr. Han Gerrits, for allowing me to benefit from his social capital by referring me to interesting and otherwise – perhaps – inaccessible interview respondents. In relation to this, I would like to thank Maurits de Klepper and Martin van der Gaag for critically reflecting on early drafts of my research-survey. I would also like to extend appreciation to Gerhard van de Bunt, Ineke Nagel, Harry Ganzeboom, Dimitris Pavlopoulos, and Irma Mooi-Reci, for assisting me in the process of mastering Stata11.

Special thanks go out to all the respondents and interviewees for participating in my research project. More specifically, I would like to thank the many entrepreneurs, industry professionals, and policy-makers for sharing their valuable views on the Amsterdam IT and new media-cluster. Besides contributing by providing valuable insights and comments, their enthusiastic responses to my research project proved very rewarding and motivating. In addition, my appreciation goes out to the respondents for filling in a very time-consuming questionnaire.

Also, I would like to extend my gratitude to Tanglewood Research (Networkgenie) and, most notably, Eric Reese, for assisting me with the technical development of an intricate social network survey in a timely, consistent, and constructive manner. In addition, my gratitude goes out to the Interactive Professional Association Netherlands (IPAN) for granting me access to their membership list.

I feel thankful for having been embedded in a dense network of family and friends while developing and finalizing my dissertation. Besides having obtained my PhD, the past five years or so were quite eventful (getting married, becoming a home owner and a father). Support from friends and family on all these occasions proved invaluable.

Special, very special thanks go out to my wife, Marike. Of all the people in my immediate surroundings, you have been a stable and supportive presence throughout my research, but also in all other aspects of my life. From the very start, your interest in my research project, your concern for my personal wellbeing, and your constant faith in my capabilities turned out to be crucial at times when I questioned myself. I cherish the many precious moments we have had together thus far, and look forward to many more precious moments to come!

To conclude, I would like to extend my gratitude to our lovely little daughter, Saartje: you make my life more meaningful.

Marc D. Bahlmann

Amsterdam, January 2011